THIS DAY IN AVIATION

1918

March Field graduates its first class of military aviators

On August 3, 1918, the aviation school at March Field near Riverside, California, graduated its first class. The young school operated five aero squadrons, each with about 250 cadets and 19 Curtiss JN-4 Jenny training aircraft.

Cadets completed ground instruction at the University of California, Berkeley, then received primary flight training at March Field before moving to advanced courses at Rockwell Field. The school soon had the capacity to graduate hundreds of aviators every three months.
